

The Death Penalty Information Center 2023 Year End Media Coverage Report

The Death Penalty Information Center's 2023 Year End Report was released on December 1, 2023, and received extensive favorably framed coverage in hundreds of print, online, television, and radio outlets across the United States and internationally. On the same day, DPIC released "Compromised Justice: How A Legacy of Racial Violence Informs Missouri's Death Penalty Today," which helped drive attention to both reports in Missouri.

Despite increases in executions and death sentences in 2023, DPIC was able to focus the weight of the coverage around the geographic isolation of the death penalty; the Gallup poll finding, for the first time, that more Americans believe the death penalty is administered unfairly than fairly; and the fact that 2023 marked the ninth consecutive year where fewer than 30 people were executed and fewer than 50 people were sentenced to death.

The lead of the Associated Press story, which ran in hundreds of outlets nationwide, read: "More Americans now believe the death penalty, which is undergoing a yearslong decline of use and support, is being administered unfairly, a finding that is adding to its growing isolation in the U.S., according to an annual report on capital punishment." This on-message framing was a significant accomplishment, given that the Gallup poll was released a month earlier and the news could have been disregarded as "old" or previously reported.

Nearly all the headlines and articles echoed these favorably-framed themes, including United Press International ("U.S. executions in 2023 were concentrated in the South, group says"); Law360 ("Executions Concentrated in 5 States as Fairness Doubts Grow"), and Bloomberg Law ("Number of states carrying out death sentences hits 20-year low"). Yahoo News, which has been named the number one most popular news website in the U.S. with 175 million unique monthly visitors, featured two deeply researched stories with the headlines: "Report: U.S. states carrying out death penalties in 2023 hit new 20-year low; Just five states accounted for all 24 U.S. executions this year, according to the Death Penalty Information Center" and "Video: Why the death penalty is less popular than it has been in decades."

The National Public Radio story, which was heard on nearly 100 stations nationwide, noted that "U.S. executions are significantly down from 1999 when they peaked around 100. This year, just five states were responsible for every execution" and concluded with "29 states have now either abolished or paused the death penalty." In a widely-carried interview, DPIC executive director Robin M. Maher told CBS Radio, "I think Americans are starting to question whether the death penalty is effective, whether it keeps them safe, and whether it's fair and just. The long-term trend has been away from usage of the death penalty in the United States."

"Compromised Justice" received coverage in Missouri's leading outlets, including the state's largest newspapers: St. Louis Post-Dispatch ("Report: Missouri has long history of racial discrimination in death sentences") and Kansas City Star ("Is 'overrepresentation of white victim cases' why Missouri uses death penalty so much?"). Tiana Herring, DPIC's Data Storyteller and the lead author of the report, was repeatedly quoted throughout the Kansas City Star's editorial page editor's column, which was reposted on the high-traffic Yahoo News website. “The past isn’t as far in the past as we think it is. Legacies of discrimination and violence are built into the foundation of the systems we have today,” she explained.

A selection of notable coverage follows.

As Mississippi Attorney General Lynn Fitch pushes for execution dates for a pair of death row inmates, most of the country is moving away from capital punishment over concerns about its fairness. A Gallup poll in October found that 50% of American now believe that capital punishment is applied unfairly, a couple of points higher than those who think it's fairly applied.
